Memorial to Almina Elizabeth Wilds

Beede.

In the course of human events cold, heartless destiny has again pointed its finger toward another home, and caused the light and life of that home to become extinguished by the removal by death of her whom in life for forty years was known as Miss Charles H. Beede and whose maiden name was Almyra Elizabeth Wilds. The deceased was born in Orange, Vt., September 11, 1860, and passed to her reward February 21, 1906. She was the sixth and youngest daughter of Sarah and William Wilds. She also had two brothers, Merritt and John Wilds, of whom John survives her and lives at West Topsham, Vt. Of the sisters she is survived by Mrs. Almon Thurston of West Topsham, Mrs. Aaron Sargent, now of Madison, Mass., recently of Washington, Vt., and Mrs. Orrville Cunningham of West Topsham, Vt. Of her immediate family she is survived by a husband, one son, Clinton H. of Randolph, Me., and three daughters, Mrs. C. N. Wales of Barre city, Mrs. F. M. Allen and Mrs. C. E. Birchy of Barre town.

For six months and over she has endured with Christian fortitude and strength a confined illness from heart and nerve trouble, which her nearest friends knew most intimately and as it was called upon to endure was but a fitting sequel to a life that has ever been fraught and filled with hard work. She was not born, it would seem, to basque in the sunshine, on flowing beds of ease, neither was it her choice, for not like the prima donna singer or the star of dramatists, who shine best in costly raiment upon life's glittering stage, she shone best in simple, elegant elegance within her home, which she loved best, ever doing what she could for those children and loved ones for whom she seemingly never could do enough. It has been said that our truest love and affection is best shown by acts, rather than words, and if this be true, as we believe it is, our mother's love was deep and pure indeed. Ever toiling and doing for others of her own flesh and blood, she has worked out her title to that inheritance which is surely hers in that kingdom not made with hands. Oh, the sad, dreary words—mother gone! They come to us, as children, with such significance now. As we visit that desolate place on earth to the children, old or young, the home of father and mother, we can no longer grieve within or see her dear face at the window. Oh, were it best, but our faith in Him leads us to believe that although we have lain the little body to rest just beyond the clouds, dear mother, is watching in the spirit world and beckoning to us who are left to follow and join her. Our beloved was human in life and may have made mistakes, but they were unintentional. Of her virtues, of which she had many, we will simply say that she was a true, devoted helpmate and wife and a fond and tender mother.

The last obsequies for the departed wife and mother were held on Saturday, February 24th, and consisted of a prayer and few appropriate remarks at the home on Trow hill by her pastor, Rev. R. F. Lowe of the M. E. church, Barre. We laid her at rest in the family lot at that place near where in childhood she played with her companions the innocent play of youth and where she began the life and obtained the inspiration which in after years were to make her the woman that she was. One daughter, Mrs. Wales, was unable to attend the final ceremony on account of sickness, and one sister, Mrs. Sargent, was not present. The remembrance by way of floral decorations in loving token to the deceased were: Pillow and dozen calls lilies from the daughters; star from the son; anchor, from the three sons-in-law; dozen calls lilies and wreath, from the husband; bouquet, from O. E. S.; bouquet carnations, Mrs. H. Pratt; bouquet carnations, from Ethel and Mrs. John Trow; bouquet carnations, from Mrs. E. D. Taft; bouquet carnations, Willie and Mary Beede; bouquet carnations, Flora Beede; bouquet carnations, Mabel Winch.

Fashion Story For Spring.

The color scheme of the season has been well defined since the beginning of the year. The use of color, which will be so strong a factor of the Spring, is in no wise new, for during the past two years the trade has fairly reveled in colors and white. The pronounced favorites in color are, first of all, shades of grey. Then comes the blues of a greyish tint, some of which have a suggestion of violet. Some of the Winter novelties will be used, together with certain shades of green and tan. This season will go down in Fashion's history as the light season, both as to color and weight of materials.
